The First Decade of Life: The Child from Five to Ten Years : Influences from Birth (Mellen Studies in Education) Thomas Edward Jordan

From the base reported in Volume I, the data of this second volume extend the sequence of events in several domains to the age of ten. The earliest predictors are identified in the delivery room, and others were added in the pre-school years. The same children are studied from the age of five to ten, and the set of variables arrayed as potential influences in the same four models continues from the pre-school period, with a few modifications. The volumes of this publication attempt to explain by multivariate analysis how selected factors influence the course of growth in an expanding set of behavioural domains. The work was originally published in 1980, this edition has a new introduction and foreword.
