With Ireland set to hold a referendum on the subject of full marriage equality for civil partnerships and gay marriage, this issue will be one of the most transformative changes in Irish society in the last century. In this book, Una Mullally, one of Ireland's most well-known journalists, charts the development of the debate from its origins to the present day. Based on interviews with all of the key figures involved, from politics to journalism and the media, and crossing both sides of the divide, this book paints a clear picture of where we have come from and the most current thinking on this fundamental debate.
