Serotonin (5-HT), at the peripheral level, is known to be an algogen capable of directly or indirectly (via sensitization) activating nociceptive afferent fibers. This may provide a novel approach to the production of novel analgesic drugs since some serotonin antagonists, unable to cross the blood brain barrier, have been shown to have analgesic properties in a model of inflammatory pain in the rat. The central serotonin systems have been the subject of considerable research over the last twenty years, and it is hoped that the critical aspects arising from this book will be instrumental in refining the experimental protocols used in allowing the roles of serotonin in nociception to be unmasked.
