Confessions of a Marijuana Eater: A Songwriter's Memoir Bobby Gosh

Songwriter Bobby Gosh's memoir Confessions of a Marijuana Eater is part biography, popular music history, personal philosophy, and of course, public acknowledgement of his career-spanning use of cannabis.

By 1952 when Bobby Gosh started touring, using marijuana was not something one publicized. The Federal Bureau of Narcotics called it the “devil weed” and intended to round up musicians who played bad music – jazz – on marijuana charges in 1947; although later cancelled, cannabis use was criminalized and mandatory minimum sentences established. Needless to say, Gosh's concerns about “coming out” or being caught as a marijuana user were well justified.

In Confessions of a Marijuana Eater ~ A Songwriter's Memoir, Gosh now shares the story of his long, successful, varied musical career, and he steps forward to “come out of the closet” as an atheist and strong advocate of cannabis policy reform.
